Roosevelt Not to Proclaim Neutral Zone

American Ships Permitted to Carry Arms to Russian Port

WASHINGTON — (AP) — President Roosevelt does not intend to issue a neutrality proclamation in the Russian-German war, Undersecretary of State Sumner Wells announced Wednesday.

American ships will be permitted to carry arms to the Russian Pacific port of Vladivostok, Wells said.

Thereby the United States will take the same position with reference to the German-Russian conflict as maintained in the undeclared war between Japan and China.

Wells noted that under the act neutrality proclamation is called when the president or congress find there exists a state of war between foreign states and deems the step necessary to promote or preserve peace and lives of Americans.

Wells said that Roosevelt "authorized him to announce that as much as he finds a proclamation not necessary in the present conflict to promote peace, the President has no intention of issuing a proclamation."

Asked what affect the action would have in regard to the transportation of arms to Russia in American ships, Wells said:

"The combat area has already been established and does not include the Pacific region."

Russia's large Pacific port of Vladivostok thus will remain open to American ships.

Revival Meet at Tabernacle

Services Are Held Each Night Except Saturday

"The Blinding, Binding and Grinding of Samson" was the sermon subject of the 20 year old boy evangelist, the Rev. Lelloy Sanders in the Tuesday night services at the Hope Gospel Tabernacle, where he is conducting a revival meeting.

Using the experience of Samson as an example of the blinding, binding effect of sin, the evangelist called upon all youth to forsake sin and live for Christ while yet young. "However free one may feel, and however much one may boast of his liberty, he is a slave until he has surrendered his life to Christ and knows the real freedom from habits, sins, fear, and anxiety, that come to all men not acquainted with Christ," the preacher declared.

Pointing out the steps which he termed the downward way, the Rev. Sanders said, "The first step to destruction is spiritual blindness. Unable to see yourself as you really appear before God. Unaware of your real spiritual need. The second step is to be bound by habits and sins until you have lost your will power, and the third step is destruction."

One of the most enjoyable features of the revival, it is said, is the congregational singing led by Raymond Sanders, and the special singing by the Sanders Brothers.

The services continue throughout the week, beginning every night, except Saturday, at 8 o'clock.

Urge Granting Army Permit to Cross Property

Spencer, Pilkinton, Weisenberger and Feild Issue Statements

Loyal American citizens throughout this district will promptly sign and return to the Army the blanks now going out to landowners, tenants and sharecroppers asking permission for troops of the Second Army to cross private property during the August maneuvers here, four well known local citizens now in public life told The Star Wednesday. They are: U. S. Senator Lloyd Spencer, State Senator James H. Pilkinton and State Representatives, Royce Weisenberger and Talbot Feild Jr.

Said Lloyd Spencer, United States senator:

"The War Department is making a necessary and reasonable request in asking private landowners for permission for troops to cross their property during the August maneuvers. Every patriotic citizen should gladly give his consent."

It is necessary for troops to cross private land, for only by actual practice of maneuvers can our fighting forces determine whether they are really prepared for National Defense.

The Army's request for prior consent of landowners and others to allow passage of the troops is a reasonable one, for the Army actually has the power to go over private property regardless. But the Army, like everything else in America, means to do things by popular consent, and so they are asking for voluntary permission in advance—and every patriotic citizen should grant it instantly.

It is the very least the home folks can do for the boys of America now actually bearing arms.

LLOYD SPENCER
United States Senator

The counties of the 9th state senatorial district — Hempstead, Pike and Montgomery — all lie within the area over which the Second Army will hold maneuvers during August and September.

In the short time between now and August 1, it is impossible for the war department to personally contact all land owners in this area; therefore each property owner and tenant is being mailed a permit form which the Army asks them to sign and return giving permission to cross their land, if necessary.

I respectfully urge that all land owners in my district cooperate with the government by signing and returning these permission forms without delay as they receive them.

These maneuvers need not be annoying to property owners as not all of the land in this area will be used or even touched by soldiers, but permission is necessary in case such property is needed. Furthermore, the government proposes to pay in full for any actual damage.

The people of Hempstead, Pike and Montgomery counties have always stood ready to do their part towards national defense. I know they will not fail in this particular.

JAMES H. PILKINTON
State Senator

Hope, Ark.
June 25, 1941

Dear Fellow Citizens:

The War Department of our government is asking permission of all land owners, tenants and sharecroppers in Hempstead County and 16 other counties in Southwest and South Arkansas to use their lands in August and September for Army maneuvers.

In view of the fact that I am myself a 1st Lt. U. S. Army, Inf.-Reg., it goes without saying that I hope every person contacted will promptly upon receipt of correspondence from the U. S. Army Land Board at Hope sign the three copies of the Permission to Use Land agreement (Form No. 280), keep the third copy and return the other two in the envelope enclosed.

Permit me to make two observations. First, maneuvers are the same to the Army that a practice game is to a baseball or football team. They are absolutely essential in the further development of the efficiency of those forces which many think may ultimately be the bulwark of Democracy.

Second, you government is fair. It has the authority to cross your land without permission, but it does not. It cooperates with its citizens, and I am fully confident that our citizens will cooperate with it in executing the required agreements for our patriotic Americans and we know that our government will pay every party.

Maneuver Plans Are Changed

Date of Troop Concentrations Moved From Aug. 11 to 17

WITH THE U. S. ARMY in Tennessee — (AP) — The Second Army has revised plans for maneuvers in which 113,000 men would participate and the changing of troops concentration date from August 11 to 17, it was officially announced Wednesday.

The delay was necessary, Second Army executives said, because some units needed extra time for the completion training at home posts.

The massing of forces will allow the army to move from Arkansas into Louisiana where, in September, it will combat the Third Army in the war games involving upwards of 425,000 of the nation's newly trained soldiers.

The Second Army maneuvers will include 19,000 men in each of the square divisions the 35th, 33rd, and the 27th; 15,000 in each of two triangular of the 5th division from Fort Suster, and the 5th from Fort Wood, Mo.; 5,000 men of the 6th cavalry from Fort Riley; 5,000 in the 75th field artillery brigade from Camp Forrest, Tenn., and 5,000 from the field artillery of Fort Wood in addition to 11,000 from Fort Knox who will participate.

Plans for 2nd Registration

Between 250-300 County Youths Expected to Sign Up

Plans have been completed for the second registration of Hempstead county youths July 1, for selective military service, H. B. Barry, chairman of the local draft board announced Wednesday.

The board estimated that between 250-300 men in Hempstead are expected to sign up. More than a million are expected to register throughout the nation.

The registration places will be confined to Hope only because of the lack of funds, and fewer youths will be required to register. Offices have been set up at the courthouse, the city hall and the draft board headquarters for registration.

The offices will be open from 7 o'clock in the morning to 9 o'clock at night on Tuesday, July 1. School teachers of the Hope public schools, as before, will aid in the registration.

All county youths who have become 21-years-old since the first national registration in October 16, 1940 up to midnight July 1, 1941, are required to register. All members of national guard units now have been discharged with also have to sign up. Persons who for any reason failed to register last October are warned to sign up July 1.

RAF Blasts French Coast

Fourteenth Day of Assaults on Nazi Cities

LONDON — (AP) — Fleets of RAF bombers roared across the channel twice Wednesday, once in the morning and then in a heavier smash during the afternoon in the 14 straight day of assaults on German cities and occupied territory.

At least seven more German planes were added officially to British claims of 121 downed in the past 8 days of air sweeps across the channel and the air ministry said the count was based only on reports so far received. The RAF acknowledged the loss of 2 planes.

British daylight raid explosives soon echoed over the water. Terrific blows hit at targets at Boulogne and Calais in the afternoon, it was reported, by a large formation of bombers escorted by clouds of fighter planes.

Rumbles from the explosion came from scattered directions and the RAF claimed a heavy toll of German fighter planes.

A British broadcast heard in New York by CBS said the recent smashes are only the beginning of the most gigantic air offensive known in world history.

Authorized sources said that greater tonnage of British bombs have been dropped on German targets in the past two weeks than during the entire month of April.

Soviet Raid on Finland Kills Many Civilians

Russians Unable to Halt 3 Nazi Drives in Central, North Fronts

NEW YORK — (AP) — The Columbia Broadcasting System reported Wednesday it had been informed by its correspondent in Stockholm that Sweden had officially granted the right of a transfer of a number of German troops from Norway to Finland.

To Tell Parliament
HELSINKI — (AP) — The Finland government will tell Parliament in an emergency session Wednesday night on what measure the nation will take against "Soviet aggression," authorities stated late Wednesday.

By the Associated Press
Finland was reported to have joined the Germans in war against Russia after Soviet planes launched a wholesale air offensive against Helsinki and southern Finland in reply to Germany's raid which was reported to have left Leningrad in flames.

Authorized German sources in Berlin said Finland had declared war and was fighting in full force. Many Finnish civilians were reported killed in the city of Lappeenranta which was set afire.

Military spokesmen in Berlin said German successes were "baffling the imagination" of achievement, of the past 3-days and said an official announcement on the war would be made Thursday.

Helsinki made a sharp protest to Russia on the "unprovoked attack" and said that a Soviet assertion that German troops were attacking Russia through Finland was a "deliberate lie."

Pravda, Communist party organ, warned that the "world will be amazed by the force which Soviet people in its indignation and patriotic wrath would hurl against Germany."

Helsinki was reported bombed twice and many fires started in Finnish cities. Finland's air units and anti-aircraft forces were said to have resisted strongly and to have shot down

Bottlenecks of Defense

Gasless Sundays in the East Believed Near

WASHINGTON — Trying to put your finger on exactly what is going to happen to you and me as a result of priorities, national defense shortages, and even temporary bottlenecks is like trying to pick feathers from the wing of a busy hummingbird.

Not long ago at a press conference, Interior Secretary and oil czar Harold Ickes was asked if he believed we would really have gasoline-less Sundays. His answer was that in the East we might have to forego pleasure driving altogether.

A few days later, Russell E. Singer, general manager of the American Automobile Association, said the problems peculiar to the eastern seaboard, we would have to get along on about 15 per cent less gasoline this year. BUT, said Mr. Singer, if eastern motorists would just cut down their driving speed, quit making "jackrabbit getaways" in city traffic, have their cars adjusted for maximum consumption and use a few other simple rules of conservation, they could cut gasoline consumption 20 per cent and forget all about gasoline-less Sundays, postponed vacations, and all other kind of restrictions.

These two views on a situation are, so far as the individual is concerned, at variance with each other, yet either of them could come true.

Campaigns May Save It

I have talked with experts in the Office of Production Management, the Commerce, Interior and Agriculture departments, and the sum of it seems to be that somewhere between these lies what's around the corner for you and Neighbor Doakes and me.

The gasoline situation is localized to one section of the country, but it illustrates the point well. If enough people wage a conservation campaign by doing the things Mr. Singer suggests and perhaps walking a couple of blocks to the corner drugstore and back instead of hopping in the old buggy, there may be few or no restrictions whatever. Even now, in Washington, a campaign is being readied to bring this about. If the campaign is a fizzle, then the restrictions will have to be made by law or executive order.

One great shortage that is already with us is in aluminum. There is NO aluminum available for articles for civilian consumption, we are told. But does that mean there will be no refrigerators, pots and pans, vacuum cleaners, bits and spurs, vacuum bottles, milk pails, marimbas and a thousand and one other aluminum things? No, it means simply that all these things will be made of something else—plastics, glass, enamel-ware porcelain—but mostly plastics.

Gano Dunn, OFM expert, has estimated the 1941 steel shortage at 1,400,000 tons and a deficit of 6,400,000 tons is forecast for next year. But 75 per cent of the nation's steel consumption now is civilian consumption. That means that national defense will have to dip into that 75 per cent to make up the shortage. We'll have to drive the old car a few months longer and again take other metals and plastics instead of steel.

Substitutes, Not 'Ersatz'

The Research Institute of America recently made a survey of substitution possibilities in all materials where shortages might develop. Rep.

Homer D. Angell of Oregon filed this report with the House. It included everything from fiber for leather, in football helmets, and white metal for nickel in clarinets, to glass and plastic for brass doorknobs.

The report also included a survey of what Nazi Germany has done along this line (this does not include 'ersatz' or simulated materials—merely substitutes). A few of them are interesting: glass wool for asbestos; glass and porcelain for copper in beer brewing equipment; pressed glass for washboards and fish net weights; popular wood for bottle corks; and whale whiskers and hair for pig bristles.

The way the experts sum it up, shortages in this country will mean substitution and conservation, with good chances that inconveniences resulting from the latter will not be more than temporary, if the consuming public cooperates.

Soviet Raid on

8 Russian planes. Germany announced the war was progressing so favorably that "great successes were in prospect" and reported deep thrusts of German columns into Russian territorial claims. The German report told of the bombardment of Russian railways and air bases and said Nazi troops took the former Lithuanian city of Vilna. Helsinki reported large fires were seen in Leningrad following a German raid of the Russian city.

German reports from the Führer's headquarters on the northeast front came the Nazis confident forecast that "the east front fighting of the army took such force and so favorably that great successes are to be expected," the communique said.

Russia acknowledged they were unable to halt the powerful drives on the central and north fronts, and reported bombing Warsaw, Danzig and Rumania Constanta, to match the German assault on the Ukraine cities and claimed 381 German planes destroyed while losing 374.

No Opposition

ANKARA—(AP)—Combined German and Rumanian forces were meeting almost no opposition in Bessarabia and should complete occupation of the whole province within a week, Rumania sources in Istanbul said Wednesday.

Allied Axis armies earlier reported the occupation of both Cornuati and Chisinau, capital respectively of Vucovina and Bessarabia which Russia obtained from Rumania a year ago by ultimatum.

There was no confirmation of rumors Monday of a reported air-naval battle off the Rumanian coast between German planes and Russian warships.

Axis forces said the troops which took Chisinau were within 10 miles of the Dniester river, boundary line between Bessarabia and the Ukraine and believed to be attempting to break through to the Soviet Black Sea port of Odessa.

It was reported that German parachute unit was in readiness to attack Odessa. Odessa is about 10 miles north of the mouth of the river Dniester. Russian planes were reported to have bombed Baltic and Dobrich, towns in the province Dubruja which Rumania ceded to Russia a year ago.

U. S. Defense and People

National Emergency to Start in Kitchen Soon

By MORGAN M. BEATTY
AP Feature Service Writer

WASHINGTON — Up to now the war has hit most of us in the pocket-book, the electric refrigerator and the fasteners on our clothes.

Next month it starts in the kitchen, the bathroom and the scrap box of nuts and bolts and wire in the basement—possibly on the Sunday afternoon joy ride.

By fall it'll catch us in the suit and overcoat, probably the fuel oil tank and possibly rent. Come winter we may even be giving up that new house we planned—or at least modifying its design.

Next year?

Every hour of the day will find us making a sacrifice if the war lasts. Oddly enough, we soon may be living better in some respects because Uncle Jim, who hasn't had a job in years may be working steadily at the factory.

We're already paying through the rocketbook because the 10 per cent social income tax for defense and we'll be paying even heavier next year. If we haven't put out income tax money, we have paid extra on taxable products like movies, cigarettes, etc., either because taxes are higher, or because we've bought more.

We are paying through the refrigerator, because ice trays are getting scarcer, and so are the freezing units.

We're paying through clothes fasteners, because manufacturers have been forced to lower the quality of dollar wash frocks for women by putting on more and cheaper buttons, and fewer zippers.

So far, aluminum products are under the heaviest restrictions. That's because defense industry is absorbing every pound of virgin aluminum production in this country.

Next hardest for the householder to get will soon be copper. I know a woman who already has given up her cherished hobby—making dishes and decorative pieces out of sheet copper. A month ago, the price went up on her. Now she can't even buy copper in the desired form. The trouble is, we're going to produce less than 1,500,000 short tons of copper this year, and defense and civilian needs just aren't enough to go around.

Zinc is scarcer, too, to galvanize your fence posts, for roofing and for garbage cans. Steel for that new home you've been planning is being delayed 14 to 18 weeks now, because Uncle Sam is buying so much.

Mrs. John Q. Citizen, you're already paying 25 to 30 per cent more for wash frocks, or taking poorer quality. And just wait until you get ready to buy your winter coat and Mrs. They'll cost you at least 20 per cent more, say the retailers.

If your husband thinks he'll escape, he's mistaken. Either he'll take cotton and wool mixtures, or he'll pay $2.50 to $5.00 more for his winter suit and overcoat.

As for food, we have plenty. In general, food prices are much lower than they were in prosperous 1929, and somewhat lower even than they were in 1937.

The government index for all foods, taking the 1935-39 average as 100, shows prices were up around 131 in 1939. The index stood at 107.9 in 1937, and it's only up to 100.6 now.

But in areas where defense industries or army camps are located food costs are much higher, or they're spotty and uncertain.

Take the case of my wife and the string beans, here in Washington. Last summer, her grocer bought a local standard-pack can of string beans, and sold them to her for 5 cents a can. Now she pays 9 cents, and her grocer tells her string beans can't be had until the new pack comes in July.

But, strangely enough, there may be no canned bean crisis in Keokuk, Ia., or Peoria.

On the other hand, top round steak a few years ago, and the stores had to meet the competition—even at a loss.

There are four reasons why we're having all these little troubles:

1. Diversion of supplies to defense and to Great Britain. That creates demand and scarcity.

2. More people are working, and demand is greater for things they couldn't buy before they got jobs.

3. The government is pegging prices of promising to peg them on several farm products, among them pork and tomatoes. They'll need lots of tomatoes for Britain, Vitamins.

4. Many manufacturers and people themselves tend to create an artificial scarcity by buying more than they need as a backlog. That's what caused the sugar crisis a few months ago. The government stepped in on that, broke up the panic and the extra profits.

P. S. to housewives:

About the only thing you buy often that won't be going up or scarce soon will be stockings. There are substitutes, fibres plenty, even if Japan pegs the price of silk. You're actually paying less now than you were a year ago.

It's the Wall Street Journal's annual "competitive kidding edition"—and this year, the old timers tell me, the men on the street are long on comedy and bulling the markets as never before.

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau's favorite gag led off a column called "Washington Haywire"—A Broad, many columnar observation that Morgenthau's new theme song for Wall Street is, "I'll Be Down to Get You With the Taxes, Honey."

There was also a crack at the dollar-a-year men in the item that "Business leaders are criticizing their associates in this burg (Washington) for spending too much time with New Dealers."

Among the serious strikes causing hemming and hawing in capital circles the Brawl Street Journal gives its attention to the spider strike. "Spider webs are a defense item," the Journal reporter noted. "The government hired bugmen to raise spiders to spin webs from which threads can be made for crosslines in firing sights. The spiders laid down on the job, issuing the ultimatum 'We won't spin by a bomb sight!'"

Poking the SEC in the ribs, the Journal's capital correspondent reported: "The SEC will look into N. Y. stock exchange trading of the last week, following reports that trading had topped more than 10 shares in one day. SEC officials want to know if investors actually are buying again? Or is this a move to corner the market?"

There was not only one but three puns on Emil Schram, the new stock exchange president, and all three were the same: that the exchange membership hereafter is to be known as "Schram and eggs." The boys must love that one.

"Curly Service"

One of the stories most often read over capital beer mugs had nothing to do with Washington. It was one to the effect that the New York curb exchange finally inaugurated real curb service.

"Thirty girl clerks handled the deals at the curb, all young shapely specimens, with blondes and brunettes about evenly divided, and a sprinkling of redheads. All were attired in shorts, military type boots, monkey jackets and plastic helmets with chin straps, the color scheme scarlet and buff."

"Strict supervision was and will be maintained over these beauties. The girls are not allowed to give tips."

Ad Writers Joined In

Some of the best chuckles came from the Wall Streeters' own ad writers. One brokerage company bragged, "Our stock may be down, but it's never out"; another that it was the "originators of the matched and lost order system" a third urged "Take us into your confidence and we'll take you."

The Chase National Bank, observing that many persons and firms had changed to Chase, wanted to know, "Why Don't You Chase Yourself?"

Another brokerage house, referring to its proximity to Old Trinity churchyard cemetery, at the upper end of Wall Street, moaned: "Still next to

All in all, these capital officials who had one in the gravy.

"The Brawl Street Journal" (the demand far exceeded the supply) agreed that this was one year Wall Street panicked Washington.

Party Round Compliments Julia Lemley

Miss Julia Lemley, who is soon to be wed, continued to be honored at the season's outstanding social events on Tuesday afternoon when Mrs. Albert Graves was hostess at an afternoon bridge at the home of her mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Pritchard.

A wealth of summer blossoms filled every conceivable space, and formed a pleasing background for the party. Three tables were arranged in the large living room for the contract players. After the games scores were counted with Miss Mary Della Carrigan and Mrs. George Brandon receiving the high score gifts. A beautiful vase was presented to Miss Lemley.

The bridal motif was carried out in the appointments, the large dining table being spread with an imported

A delicious salad plate with iced tea was served after the games. The chosen theme was carried out in dainty cakes which were topped with miniature brides and grooms.

Mrs. Graves was assisted in extending courtesies during the afternoon by Mrs. O. A. Graves, Mrs. Frank Howson, and Mrs. W. J. Jones.

The guest list included:

Miss Julia Lemley, Mrs. W. Miss Louise Hanagan was hostess at a lovely bridge on Tuesday night at 8 o'clock in compliment to Miss Julia Lemley, with quantities of exquisite summer flowers used in the decorative scheme.

Bridal tallies were distributed to the guests by the hostess. A beautiful bouquet of pink and blue daisies marked the lovely white chair, which was to be the place of the honoree. She received a dainty corsage of sweetheart roses.

After several spirited games of contract played from the four tables arranged in the entertaining rooms, Mrs. G. A. Hobbs was awarded the high score gift, a Revere set, and the hostess' gift to the honoree was a lovely bow-shaped vase.

On the dining table was an unusually pretty arrangement of pink and blue daisies in a crystal bowl. Gladioli ranging from the very pale shades to the deepest hues were used in another modern arrangement.

The chosen color scheme was again carried out in the delightful ice course served after the games. Assisting in dispensing hospitality during the evening were the hostess' mother, Mrs. A. F. Hanagan, and Mrs. Marie Wilson.

SERIAL STORY

CALIBAN FROM CALEB

BY NORMAN KAHL

YESTERDAY: On the way out to a place in New Jersey where Spike, Midge and his henchmen intend to kill Angus, the brocoli racket is explained to Angus, who learns for the first time that he has been in a crooked business.

When they reach the spot where the killing is to take place, Angus bumps up Spike and two of "the boys." The three get away in the car and the first time he bumps Spike and Midge and Tim in the truck and starts back for Manhattan.

FITZWATER UNMASKED

CHAPTER IX

HOIMON the Hoist doesn't look back after he shoots away from the grove in Spike's car. He doesn't even take a deep breath until he reaches the main highway back to Manhattan. He feels like a man who has just seen a tidal wave.

If this guy Angus MacPhillips is dumb, then he, Hoimon the Hoist, once known as the best second-story man in the business, is a country parson. Hoimon doesn't know how Luigi Castaloni is going to take this, but it isn't going to be sweet. He waits until he is safely back in New York before he pulls up in front of a drug store and dashes for the telephone booth. He dials a number and waits.

"Hello, Boss," he says between his teeth. "This is Hoimon—no, Hoimon the Hoist. Yeah. I got somethin' to tell ya. . . . Well, that's what I want ya tell ya about. . . . I see, we takes this mug MacPhillips out in the country like you said and. . . . No, Boss, wait a minute. When we get there everything goes haywire. . . . Yeah, that's right. We didn't get him."

"I still don't believe it, but if my eyes wasn't deceivin' me, MacPhillips has laid out Spike, Butch and Trigger. . . . Now don't be sore. I tell you, ya never saw anything like it. . . . I thought I oughta get back and warn you. . . . Yeah, on the way out, we spilled everything. We didn't figure he'd be coming back so we couldn't see no harm in tellin' him the facts of life. And now he is coming back, and I got a notion it won't be healthy for us—not for awhile at least. If you ask me. . . . Doss, wait a minute. Are you still there?"

Hoimon clicks the receiver a couple of times and then hangs up. He goes over in his mind all the hideouts he can think of in the city and then he goes back to the car and drives away.

LUIGI CASTALONI is the least bit irritated. He should have known better than to trust Spike and his gorillas. Up to now, life has been pretty smooth. There have been practically no hitches, but this is a tough baby. He supposes he'll have to clear out for awhile—at least until this thing blows over.

Maybe the cops won't believe MacPhillips. But if they get Spike and Butch and Tim, one of them will talk. And then there is MacPhillips himself. MacPhillips knows about the racket and he knows now that it is Castaloni alias Fitzwater who has stolen his girl.

Maybe that is the answer. Adoreen is a cute little dickens—a little on the Sunday School side, perhaps, but a pretty swell piece of furniture. He can take a powder out to that place up on Long Island that nobody knows about. It will be nice having Adoreen around while he waits for things to simmer down a little.

THE sun is going down when Castaloni pulls up in front of Adoreen's apartment. He walks swiftly through the lobby and into the elevator. When he gets to Adoreen's door, he is shaking a little and feels ashamed of himself for getting the jitters just because of a dumb lug like MacPhillips.

Adoreen isn't expecting Mr. Fitzwater tonight, so she is a little surprised when she sees him at the door. She is even more surprised to see that he isn't smiling and that his face is kind of white, except where there are dark pockets under his eyes that she has never noticed before.

"Why, Mr. Fitzwater, come on in," she says. She is figuring on eating dinner at home and going to the club later for her shoes, so she is dressed in a cute littleingham house dress and low-heeled shoes that make her look like a high school sophomore.

"I came to take you for a drive, Mr. Fitzwater," says Castaloni-alas-Fitzwater. "Hurry and throw a coat on. It's so nice out now."

"How lovely. I'd like that. But I just put some pork chops on and I'm not dressed. Stay here for dinner, Mr. Fitzwater, and after we've eaten I'll change my clothes and we can drive for awhile before my first show."

"No, no. Right away. Please hurry."

Adoreen doesn't know whether to be shocked or hurt. "Why, Mr. Fitzwater," she says. "What's the matter? There's no hurry."

"That's what I want to think."

"Have a drink. You'll feel better."

Castaloni comes toward her, and his face looks hard and wolfish.

Wind, Rain, Jail Get in Movie Hair

HOLLYWOOD — Some of the movie magicians have been having unusual troubles lately. Out at 20th-Fox all the king's horses and men couldn't open a jail to release Randolph Scott and Linda Darnell. And on the imposing Nantucket Island set built for Alexander Korda's new picture, appropriately titled "Illusions," the sky caught fire and burned up some clouds.

That wasn't all that has happened on the latter flicker. Director Julian Duvivier came out of the house that has been built on the rocky shore of an inlet, slipped in the snow, skidded down the bank into the water and landed so hard on the concrete bottom that his right wrist was broken. He now has to do twice as much gesturing with his left hand.

Sky Under Canvas

Such accidents, though, haven't detracted from the final grandeur of one of the most remarkable indoor sets ever made hereabouts. A complete cyclorama of sky and sea incloses an area about twice the size of an ordinary sound stage and all roofed by canvas. The whole structure was nearly wrecked by a sudden windstorm the other day.

Inside, wind and wave machines made a first-class storm of their own. The cove, bounded by a rocky breakwater and the rugged disland shore, is large enough for Merle Oberon and Alan Marshal to sail around in a 24-foot yawl. The rocks were cast in square sections, fitted together on scaffolding, painted, and even equipped with moss and mussel shells near the waterline.

Producer Korda isn't skimping with Brother Vincent Korda when the latter designs sets. Cost of this one was more than $30,000 and it's only one of several in the picture. Later touches of realism add to the expense.

For instance, the Kordas refused to consider artificial snow. They brought in a machine that grinds chunks of ice and forces a coarse approximation of snow through a nozzle. In this way, they've been spraying about 90,000 pounds of ice a day on the rocks and buildings.

Now about that thwarted jail delivery of Randolph Scott and Linda Darnell. There's a sequence in "Belle Starr" in which some pals of the jagged paid tie a rope from a wagon to a barred window and pull out part of a wall of a brick jail.

Erasing set designers, however, neglected to provide for a straight-away pull and had placed another building so close to the jail that the pulling had to be done almost parallel with the wall itself. Even though work-men with chisels had cut away a good deal of brick kinside, the plunging horses couldn't budge the section that was supposed to collapse.

Time and again some more brick was chiseled but nothing happened. Then they took time out with a steel cable, which wouldn't show, was attached to the rope through some pulleys to a point of stowage where 20 husky men prepared to heave.

Director Irving Cummings gave the word. The camera turned, the men whipped up the horses, the laborers strained at the cable—and the wall still stood! Cummings, fuming, told everyone to go home. By tomorrow he'd have a collapsible wall for them if he had to build it himself.

Edson in Washington

Jones Boys Go to Work for Business

WASHINGTON — Whether it works or not, give the Department of Commerce credit for trying to organize some of the bureaucracy out of its system, particularly in the big Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

In spite of the war, which has nearly wrecked our foreign commerce, and in spite of the defense effort usual must go for the duration, which dictates that "business as usual" must go for the duration, the domestic commerce boys feel that they have a job to do in helping business wherever possible. Out of that idea has come the general reshuffling of the bureau.

Center of the new idea will be 12 apostles to spread the word from Washington. They will be called Regional Business Consultants and there will be one for each of the 12 federal reserve districts. These 12 men, hand picked not only from the bureau but also from business and research staffs of several universities, will gather in Washington soon to begin a course of training.

Then, early in the fall, they will take up their jobs in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Richmond, Atlanta, Chicago, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Dallas and San Francisco. They will be backed up by 19 field officers already at work in other key cities, and the entire 31 will be known as "The United States Department of Commerce Field Service."

Business Drummer Uppers

The idea is that this new agency will work both ways. Field officers will report to Washington on business conditions in their districts and will be available as business consultants to trade associations, chambers of commerce and individual business executives. They will try to help work out readjustments in foreign trade, give advice on outlets in South and Central America, help the Rockefeller committee in trying to improve cultural relations below the Rio Grande, and on top of that try to help business men fit into the defense picture.

While this new field service is the one that will have the most direct contact with business men in every community, it is only one phase of the broader plan of Department of Commerce reorganization. Previously, the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce was organized on what was called a vertical basis. That is, there was a separate division for every commodity or group of industries. There were bureau chiefs for chemicals, iron and steel, movies, machinery, tobacco, and so on. The tendency was for each division to consider that its particular pet and baby was the center of the world and that all other business revolved around it.

Under the reorganization, most of these division or commodity or industry chiefs-of-section have been given the status of consultants, and their function hereafter will be to sit in with the new horizontal organization of five principal divisions. The Field Service unit outlined previously becomes the Division of Regional Recovery Policy, which is a Division of International Economy, which is foreign trade. A Division of Industrial Economy, organized horizontally by units of merchandising, consumption, construction, durable goods, and so on. Divisions of Research and Information complete the picture.

Hoover's Folly Not So Foolish

Now all this may seem like a lot of governmental red tape organization which it probably is and you should not be bothered by it. It is illustrative, however, of the way these big government bureaus operate. You could wander for days through this Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce without meeting all the people or finding out what they do.

When the Department of Commerce Building was finished, it was dubbed "Hoover's Folly" and everybody wondered what on earth they would use to fill the offices on all seven floors covering the equal of two big city blocks. Today the place is filled to overflowing and they're trying to make the big, unwieldy thing function for the good of the citizenry.

And the fact is that it does a lot of good. It is probably a toss-up as to whether you can get more miscellaneous information from the Department of Commerce or the Department of Agriculture. If you write in asking for information about your particular business, they have some. If you call in person, there is an information office which is trying desperately to steer business men coming to town on defense jobs. It may take two or three tries to get you what you want but they try.

Death Story of London

Writer Tells of Death in Wholesale Quantities

By PAUL MANNING

NRA Service Staff Correspondent LONDON — Peacock Alley at the heart of the city where the girl ambulance driver was in uniform, this was her night off—so she wanted to celebrate.

But one hour was all the celebration lasted because 20 minutes after the air raid alarm sounded it was evident that this was no ordinary blitz night. The German bombers were coming over in waves, and by their sound you knew the planes were the big four-engine jobs.

They were coming over at a great height until they reached the center of the city and then they would dive in long, roaring glides until it seemed they were just skimming the rooftops—though actually they always leveled out at around two or three thousand feet.

After three bombs had rocked the hotel, each time stopping the babble of talk that always runs through a big dining room, she left the table to telephone the station of her ambulance unit, which is a No. 1 danger spot in London during a raid. The station stands between two military objectives and is in the center of the several thousand grubby homes which always surround such objectives.

Station is hemmed in by three streets. When she returned, we left for the station. Her unit was being swamped with casualty calls and I wanted to see what driving in an ambulance really meant during the blitz hours when first you see life, and then you see death.

The station was not on fire when we arrived, but it might just as well have been. It was in the triangular corner of three fires—a garage, a paper warehouse and a freight yard which made three fiery beacons and turned night into day.

There was an ambulance at the curb which we learned was now available. A short 40 minutes before, two girls had decided to double up in one ambulance because trying to drive around bomb craters and rubble in this section during a blitz is a two-person proposition. They had made one trip to the hospital and were returning for another load of injured when a bomb, the one you never hear struck the right front fender. Not even the fender was left, but the next day one of the wheels was found in the middle of the next block.

So that was the ambulance that was available, the one this second girl had left parked by the curb. And this night the young little Captain, Madame O. C. she is called by her subordinates, did not object to a man not in uniform helping out.

Each Run Was "A Nightmare" Climbing in, we headed for a large public air raid shelter which had been hit. There were more than 60 injured stretched out along the street, and the wards continued to dig, they uncovered the bodies of the dead.

Some were already dead and many, you knew, wouldn't last the trip out between the shelter and the hospital.

That trip, and the others which followed, was a nightmare. The girl was good, though. On the trips when she was at the wheel, which was most of the time, she never got rattled. Not even when we were going slowly down an open street and suddenly find the street no longer open because high explosives had cut a crater down center.

When that happened, I'd climb out and try to find a way around, or else an alley cutting into the next block. Usually, though, it meant turning the ambulance in the middle of the road and heading back to the last cross street.

We made that first trip to the hospital all right, and the fifteen or more which followed. At 3:30 in the morning the downpour of heavy bombs seemed greater. We were no longer clearing the air raid shelter, because long ago that job had been taken care of with the help of half a dozen other ambulances. So it was purely spot work by this hour.

Fires Welch Beauty Palls on Them

We'd return from the hospital to the ambulance station and wait for a call from some air raid warden whose crew of men had just finished digging through to people trapped beneath the timbers of their home.

The wait was never long, however, because the telephone was always ringing. Then it was out in the sharp-nerve and bombs again—only by now there was no thought of danger because every movement had long ago become automatic.

Even the drive down the avenue flanked by fires and the streaming water which firemen continued to play upon each inferno, had lost its effect of deadly beauty.

Twice, after 3:30, when we passed such fires, we stopped and went over to the ever-present mobile canteen for hot tea.

Along about five the German planes stopped their bombardment and returned to their home bases, but the job of transporting the injured continued on until nine in the morning. Then it all began to taper off and with the day shift scheduled to take over, we returned to the station.

She was tired, of course. So was I. Everyone was. But sitting around in the big living room of the house which this unit used for an ambulance station, you couldn't help marvel at the job these girls were doing.

For most of them, it was the first time in their lives they'd really seen death in wholesale quantities with no punches pulled. But they were standing the ordeal fine. Sitting around like this, though, immediately after a heavy night, they were inclined to go to pieces—just a little.

"You become a little hardened after a while," one said, "but that is only when you're working. Later, like now, you know you'll never get used to the sight of violent death—never, even if this war last another thousand years!"

of the Hilltoppers says year-round stressing of the sport is unhealthy—especially for the boys who engage in it.

"Staleness can result from over-emphasizing football out of season," asserts Stidham.

"Players become fed up, lose interest and are anything but on edge when they resort for practice in the fall."

Stidham, upon the conclusion of spring practice in Milwaukee, told his squad to forget the sort until the practice season rolls around in September.

Then he modified that by suggesting that the boys start thinking football in August, practicing in September and playing in October.

He discouraged several stars from taking footballs home with them to practice.

Gus Dorais and Knute Rockne perpected the forward pass by throwing the football around while working as waiters at Cedar Point on Lake Erie.

Benny Friedman and Harry Newman of Michigan passing fame spent summers at boys' camps chucking the leather.

But Norais, Friedman and Newman will tell you that they would have been just as well off had they forgotten the sport they liked so well and returned fresh in the autumn.

Morton Kaer, All-America quarterback of Southern California, some years back, did not play any football to speak of until Howard Harding Jones took charge of the Trojans in his senior year.

I recall Kaer rambling on the field for his initial spring workout under the old Yale end.

"Who's that?" asked Jones.

"Morton Kaer," replied someone.

"The hurdler?" Jones wanted to know.

"How long has he played football?" "Two years."

"What's the matter with him?" He was told that the previous coach considered Kaer too dumb to play football.

Kaer called plays faultlessly the following fall... ran wild.

Reminded of the former coach's opinion of Kaer, Howard Jones remarked: "Well, a fellow that fast has to be pretty dumb not to be able to play football."

Material and coaching are the most important items in football.

And providing it is there, the talent and the coaching does not have to put in overtime.

RAILWAY
LABOR UNION DEMANDS
WOULD COST
900 Million Dollars
A YEAR

THE labor unions have made their demands upon the railways of the United States—and through the railways upon the PUBLIC. These demands are vastly larger in proportion than any they have ever made. The economical and efficient operation of the railways is vital to the nation's defense effort. Therefore, the Western Railways present to the public the following facts:

The labor unions representing engineers, firemen, conductors, brakemen and switchmen are demanding a 30 per cent increase in wages, amounting to 190 million dollars a year—although their present rates of pay are the highest in history.

Other unions representing a greater number of railway employees are demanding wage increases ranging as high as 95 per cent—averaging 47 per cent—and amounting to 580 million dollars a year—although their present rates of pay also are the highest in history.

Thus the wage increases being demanded by the labor unions amount to 770 million dollars a year, an average increase in excess of 41 per cent.

In addition, certain of these labor unions have demanded advances in their pay not included in the above figures, and more rules for the creation of unnecessary jobs.

The situation, then, is this: The total cost of complying with all the demands made would be approximately 900 million dollars a year!

The average weekly earnings of railway employees are now 15 per cent higher than in the peak year 1929, while the cost of living is 12 per cent less.

The demands of the railway labor unions are being made when the entire nation has just been asked to make a supreme effort for National Defense.

The railways cannot meet these demands without a great increase in the cost of transportation. They exceed by more than 700 million dollars the income that the railways had left after paying their annual expenses, taxes and charges in 1940.

The railways have a vitally important job before them. They need all their resources to continue adequately to serve you and contribute effectively toward the National Defense Program.

Odyssey of Lend-Lease

Happenings on U. S. Ship as It Starts to War

Here is the first and exclusive eyewitness story of the entry into the battle of the Atlantic of an American Lend-Lease war vessel, now a fighting unit of the British navy. A writer for the AP Feature Service and the Hope Star rode the vessel to Canada to give you this graphic account.

By MORGAN M. BEATTY
AP Feature Service Writer

ABOARD H. M. S. — AT SEA—
The lights of metropolitan New York blazed a friendly farewell.

Steaming close, the rest of our squadron was silhouetted against the western horizon, their running lights winking and weaving back of us as we slipped out of the harbor.

Ahead was the dark Atlantic. The bridge of our leading ship buzzed with efficient orders and responses. The yellow reflection from New York cast dull streaks along the barrels of our big guns stripped for action on the decks below. Except for those deadly guns, it would have seemed like a pleasure trip.

Suddenly the senior officer present lowered his binoculars, issued terse orders.

"Darken ship! Show NO lights! Executive Order!"

His voice was quiet, almost casual. But instantly the bridge went inky black. Signal men rushed to stations with long-barreled flashlights and winked pin-points of light at our following train.

In a few moments all our warships disappeared in a well of darkness. All that remained of warm, bustling America was a faint yellow glow.

"Here was blackout for you — in American waters!"

"Practice?" "Hardly!"

I moved closer to the shadowy form of our commanding officer.

"Practice?" I asked. "A British ship takes it for granted the enemy may be anywhere. There's no point in making a target of these fine ships your government has turned over to us."

"Target?"

"Yes, you see, a submarine is rather blind at night. Unless somebody gives him a light to aim at."

"No need to finish the sentence. The submarine commander who could sink a Lend-Lease ship before it had been in British hands more than a few hours would be a national hero in Germany. And so—we were dark."

In those few minutes I saw and felt for the first time the difference between a world at war and my own

United States so close behind me. I had come aboard this former Coast Guard cutter the night before, soon after it had been transferred from the United States to the Royal Navy. They told me the ceremony was impressive.

What had been a U. S. S. became an H. M. S. The American crew had decked her out in dark war paint. Gone was the gleaming white coat of a Coast Guard vessel. They had loaded her with guns, wired her for automatic blackouts at night. She was complete down to the last knife and fork, even to the electric refrigerator in the ward room. And her decks were coated with crushed granite for sure-footed action against an enemy.

Then a quiet, disciplined English crew took over a vessel they'd never seen before, spin her wheel, turn her knobs, snap her switches, oil her guns. They'd done it as casually and confidently as I'd turn the spigot on my shower at home.

A Poker Game

When I stepped across the gangplank, I was greeted by an officer, and taken to the ward room below, where I met my ship mates. The executive officer reminded me that formality was absent in war-time, bade me make myself comfortable. Soon the commanding officer came down, gave me the same cordial greeting, told me I had the run of the ship—even to his excellent shower.

When my American taxi-driver came below to collect his fare, he wished me well, as if he expected I'd never be seen alive again. My new friends ribbed me unmercifully about that. And we sat down to dinner.

In one of those bright English drawing room conversations I discovered that the departing American officers had introduced the English ward room officers to poker, and left with something of a profit.

"We'd like to take the time to get it back from you," said one. "But we've got to handle this ship."

As for America, they liked best our women, our coffee, our apple pie, our night clubs, and our newspapers.

British Loan Is Studied

RFC May Provide Loan to Buy Supplies in U. S.

WASHINGTON —(P)— Jesse Jones, federal loan administrator, said Wednesday he was considering a loan to the British government.

He announced in a formal statement that the loan was being studied by the RFC under the new law authorizing such a loan and added that the purpose of the loan was to provide Britain with dollar exchange to pay for war supplies in this country without having to force sale of holdings.

No amount of the loan was given, which was reported in some quarters in the sum of several hundred million dollars. RFC officials hinted that a smaller figure is contemplated to begin with.

Collateral for the loan would include direct investments and the diversification of stock and bonds in this country.
